Whenever information is requested, data will be processed for the time necessary to fulfil that request; however, whenever a quote is requested data will be handled for a maximum of 12 months from the effective proposal notwithstanding further retention for the time necessary for a settlement (however reached) of any eventual disputes that may arise.

Whenever the Data Subject becomes a customer of the Data Holder, data will be kept for the whole duration of the commercial relationship and successively for the completion of all eventual obligations connected or deriving from its establishment therein, for the time period required by law and according to the statute of limitations of rights regarding the commercial relationship notwithstanding further retention for the time necessary for the settlement (however reached) of any eventual disputes that may arise.

Nature of data provision and consequences of refusal

Data provision is necessary and therefore any eventual full or partial refusal to provide data may result in preventing the Data Holder from pursuing the purposes mentioned above.

The Data Holder will not spread information, but will communicate data to internal personnel authorised to use data in relation to their job description as well as salespeople, credit institutes, insurance companies for debt collection, credit, commercial information, factoring and consultancy, to entrepreneurial associations and/or organisations, service professionals or companies and to public and private bodies, particularly when there are inspections and audits.

Such recipients, who hold data on behalf of the Data Holder, will be responsible with the appropriate contract or other legal instrument.

Data transfer to Third countries and/or an international organisation

Personal data will not be subject to either transfer to non-European Third countries or international organisations.
